ABRIDGED BIO

A dynamic and experienced writer and educator, Desireé has facilitated thousands of workshops in community and academic spaces. Her poetry and creative writing have been read, watched, and listened to by millions of people worldwide. Desireé's creative and community work draws from a feminist, communal, Indigenous, and class-conscious framework. With over 14 years of in-depth teaching experience and a writing career equally as long, Desireé facilitates spaces for community and belonging to flourish and writing voices to strengthen. Chahta and an enrolled citizen of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma, a sister, an auntie, and a committed storyteller, scholar, space creator, and lifelong student communally and formally taught and trained. Interested in continuous and long-term community building through creative writing and storytelling through frameworks of resource sharing, resource liberation, and consciousness raising. Desireé's teaching and community work has a particular interest in gender-diverse writers systemically denied access to artistic and creative resources, and her facilitation and leadership aims to liberate resources and opportunities alongside collaborators. Desireé has extensive experience working among diverse writers across the United States through grassroots writing and storytelling frameworks with an emphasis on counter-storytelling and narrative correction work.
